Woman: Nothing is wrong with my hearing. You just need to speak up.

Man: Do you hear ringing in your ears.

Woman: Not more than usual.

Man: Have you been asking people to repeat themselves?

Woman: May be.

Woman: The battery on my computer is almost out of juice. It's a rechargeable battery, so instead of replacing it, I need to plug it in. But there are no outlets in here.

Man: I don't see one either.

Woman: forget it. I just finish watching the movie on my phone. Oh, No! My phone battery is running low too.

Man: Do you want to borrow my radio? At least you can listen to music for a while.

Woman: A radio?

Man: No thanks. I don't think a radio will do me any good. I just need enough electricity to finish watching my movie.

With my work email I try to take an organized approach. I scan each email looking at the sender and subject line and delete the ones I don't need or want. With the remaining ones file some for future reading and write replies to the rest. That takes up a large part of my work day. When I'm done and I look at the clock, I'm often surprised that how much time I've spent processing emails.
